

Adronis : The soul in between lifetimes

Q: What is life like for the soul in between lifetimes?

It is not primarily about the soul.

The soul itself presents that of a witness body, it doesn't actually involve itself in the experiences of incarnation.

Picture a honeycomb, and you are in the center of that honeycomb. Everything that surrounds you are honeycomb cells, they are infinite in number, and every cell shows an experience, a lifetime. The soul does not get involved with those experiences, although the projections, or the intentions that extend from the soul, are the nature of the involvement. The soul is much like a mother or father watching the screen of the children of their own projections living their lifetimes. This represents the nature of the evolution of themselves.

The infinite and the finite are coming together. Through yourself being the medium or the entity that is therefor incarnating into this lifetimes, you are getting a greater picture, a greater realization of how the finiteness of life is interacting with the infiniteness of being. So it's taking the finite nature of life and taking the infinite nature of being-ness and putting it together, to form an entity. The entity-ness of yourself to which you come into in your life, believing yourself to be the personality consciousness. Entity means is: one who is of personality. When you let go of that personality, you are no longer an entity, that was just the label used. When you let go of that entity consciousness, you surrender it completely, you become neutralized. You enter into being-ness again and in that being-ness you become one with the soul, you become one with spirit, one with the divine, one with God, one with Self, with a capital S.

There are infinite ways of how that transition can happen.

You might walk along the street and you look back and you see yourself laying on the ground, lifeless. And you realize: I just died. But I am still here. I can still feel myself. I can still see my hands, and can still feel my thoughts, I can still be cognizant [...]

You are experiencing a replica of the reality of what you experienced in the physical state, although it's not physicalized any more, it's like being in a dream state.

Now you operate on a much lighter frequency. You can see yourself passing through walls, changing shape, see yourself in multiplicities of yourself, in different bodies, you can go to different planes just by thinking of them.

You may explore that for quite some time.

At some point you really want to explore what you are here to do and you call for help. Now a beautiful singularity opens up within you and out step two angels. They hold out their hands and they ask: Are you ready to come home now? Are you ready to come into the light?

You let them take your hands and you go directly into this singularity and move hundreds of thousands of miles per hour through this tunnel, which we call the hyperbavoid(?) bringing yourself back into singularity. And from that particular point forward we have nothing to tell you. There is nothing there that involves words that can be described. Other than the ideas of peace, bliss, happiness, perfection. You have come home.

We can never tell you what drives you to decide to leave home, to come back into the mind space and to incarnate again. That again is not something that can be conveyed by words. But you go home for certain amounts of time. There is nothing that can be shared, it is an absence of all experiences, there is nothing to recollect. You are simply in a state of mind and that mind ceases. For however long, we can't tell you. But at some point you decide to come back into the world of form again, and here you are, you are incarnating in another body, on another planet, as a form of life, to have an experience.

Some of you may recall about the nature of having a life contract. Some of you may not. Some of you just stepped into the light and you stepped into someone's womb. Some of you remember writing up your contract about exactly what I am here to do, partnering up with the people I needed to partner up with so that we could learn together... and you step into the light, and before you know it, you're in a womb again. And you are born into a world and you are here to do what you are here to do. You are again fulfilling what you are here to do on a spiritual, contractual level, but the soul itself is the eternal observer of the honeycomb. It never moves. It never involves itself with finiteness. Because the soul is infinite. It only knows the infinite. It is only when you bring the infinite into the finite, to when it sees this, it is the one realizes that they are the infinite, despite the idea that they are moving into the finiteness of life, that's where the soul, that where God come upon you. God comes upon you, because you remember your infinite nature. But also remember that the spirit can come and go. [...] You do not know where it came from and you do not know where it is going, but it will come upon you for a certain amount of time and then it will leave.

That's the idea:

To embody the nature of your infinite self through the body, so that you realize: all there really is, is the infinite. Even though I am playing this game of finiteness, it's helping me to understand my own infinite nature.
